"OUR MARY" TO RETIRE.

Miss Anderson declares that she is to marry Mr. Navanno, and that she will prise him ever and anon, instead of flauntnever appear behind the footlights. This is a matter that chiefly concerns Mr. and woman who has achieved an enviable gold threads, position on the stage has been rather snubby towards her native land. When one recalls the difference between her social position in London and that in New York it is not to be wondered at that as a wife of a rich, well-placed citizen of from the footlights. MARY ANDERSON has already had an artistic career to which Mrs. NAVARRO can revert with pleasure amid the new sphere of existence into Health and happiness to Our Many in any part of Broadway where there are numbers of large business houses with a woman with leaden eyes and a willow-wand shopping trade for carriage folk is kept than in other parts of the town? No: but the shopkeepers want it clean and they clean it themselves. Go and get points from them, Mr. BEATTIE. If there sn't money enough, clean as long as it lasts and then say you want more.

CLEAN, MR. BEATTIE, CLEAN!

The public will be more content with one square of clean streets than several miles of the tidiest excuses from the Street Commissioner. The thought dawning on everybody's mind is that there must be some enormous difficulty in keeping New York streets in a decent exceedingly quiet, gentle and easy. condition. Else, they ask, why is a man paid to do it, goes in to do it, and thendraws his salary and tells the people that pay it that the pavements are too had to hope to clean them?

Fortune and Misfortune.

And fortune seems disposed to cast her bounties where she will;
They fall to some while going fast, and some while standing still.

To some, indeed, both large and late; to some, they gather small;
To most who worry, watch and wait, they never come at all.

Misfortune seems, indeed, more free to show her chilling face. And fingers of adversity that scourge the human race. Her subjects oft who might be up, behold her with ring frown.

And take the potion from her cup that keeps her victims down. Ah! who that feels her hand severe will not subscribe to this: He who escapes Misfortune here will not a Fortune miss. Cant. E. J. Ames.

Only.

Only a tress of sunny hair; Only a tress.
Only a slipper, worn and old;
Only a ring, a band of gold;
Only a mitten, stained and torn;
Only a faded dress.

Only a face on memory graved; Only a baby's face.
Only a pair of timid eyes;
Only a voice whose echo dies;
Only a trace of love that's lost; F. K. Burr, M. D., 325 Eighth sve., N.Y.

Brotherly Love. Human hearts by want affrighted, palpitate in wild unrest;
And the love of self-incited blights the purest and the best.
Human sympathy and kindness tink in antihuman greed. Brutalized by moral blindness, brother feeds

Brutalized by moral blindness, brother feeds on brother's need.
But those human hearts are golden, eased of all debasing fear:
Touch them and you will embolden human love to reappear.
Show them how they break each other wantonly in needless strife.
How if brother spared his brother all could taste the joys of life. L. F. B.

Perplexity. You ask me to write you a poem. Not over twelve lines, you say. If good, you will give me two eagles: If not you will cast it away. The subject you leave to my choosing.
The theme may be funny or sad, But it really is very confusing.
And enough to drive any one mad.

For I awfully want the money, But I haven't a thing to say.
Unless I write of "a wonder"
This is the twelfth pleasant day.
KATE, Port Chester, N. Y.

To a Male Coquette. You say 'tis woman's lot to love and say good

To stretch out empty arms to empty air! To you, a woman's heart, left in the dust t Is worthy but of passing thought and care. You cannot pass a bud swayed by the Summer wind.

But you must tear its tender leaves apart.
To gather its perfume and hidden beauties find.

And scan with curious eye its golden heart.

You cannot leave a heart, unconscious and at rest
From love, with all its joy and bitter pain
Without the cruel touch that wakes the sleeping breast;
Alas, the broken bud ne'er blooms again!
A. J. B.

Modern Fame. Poet's light on me descending, Give, oh! give the power of blending libythmic thoughts which o'er me roll linto an harmonious whole. Pain would I this end attain; But the sordid love of gain Crowds out all the wish for glory; Naught but the reward's before me

What is the goal I most would prize? What fame is dearest to my eyes? List, now, ye shades of poets olden, It is a double eagle golden.
